AUTHOR FORWARD

This is a book about many things of which non are true only allegorical falsehood if ever metaphor could be so. Let one explain by the use of a parable. Imagine for a moment you are god and you have custodianship over the world at large and America in particular. What would you do to help human evolution? Or to put it a more mild way between the military, religion, consumer culture and media which lessor evil would you choose? Think about it for a moment would you because its an important choice to make! But as you are god one can see you have already made the choice! In fact you made it long ago as it was your will that the world unfold as is! Well dear reader pretending to be god for just a moment somebody should have told Charles because somehow Charles got it into his head that he is on a mission to save humanity from itself. Alas Charles where is your common sense? Humanity has already got god to save it from itself but who will save humanity from god? Well thats easy America answers we have the military, religion, consumer culture and media. They alone could save us from anything. Even a toxic culture full of whatever fills a modern day 21 century toxic culture with these days. Or perhaps that should read as “whatever” in 21 century speak! One hopes one never offended anybody who really knows how to use that whatever word in its proper context! Fuck you! So who is Charles and how come America loves an anti-hero so much these days that its prepared to fork out billions of dollars on alternate rebel images to conform to? Does not anyone know anymore how to think for themselves America being the great cultural exporter it is these 21 century days! Sorry one takes that back because it is too facetious. What one really intends to say is that everyone loves a rebel made good even if they do kill themselves in the end! Its true folks and if it were not then there would not be that 27 year club all these rebel rockers want to join up. Its the kind of club that sends them to eternity and infinity far far away from the here and now of our boring mundane lives. Something about death which fascinated the human psyche do you not think which is the point because when you are dead you are out of your head and do not have to think no more! Death is the ultimate must have consumer item. Its cheap and quick and costs nada to have at all. You can get death anywhere these days in the 21 century. In fact death is so available that the authorities have tried to ban it and make it illegal with science, technology, hospitals, religions and faiths! But you can still get death any where you want which of course makes it the supreme lifestyle choice for the 21 century endless rock pusher of the sisyphus myth variety. Charles took a dose of death to get off the rock pushing rat race he found himself in. Unfortunately for most consumers because death is a once in a lifetime offer its not really a repeatable consumable item so the savvy business man marketing death has to sell it to the general public under wraps so to speak. Charles being our anti-hero was of course totally against all this needless subterfuge. Charles was of the opinion that if you want to catch a case of death it should be your free choice to do so. However corporate interests being what they are that marketing strategy would not advertise itself as very palatable to the genteel American consumer so death has to be marketed embedded into different and varying formats. Let us examine some of the current formats death is marketed under in todays 21 century America. Military - Death comes as an occupational hazard for those who like dangerous working conditions and a bonus for the intellectually challenged. Religion - Death comes as an escape route into a after-life paradise designed to compensate you for your trouble while alive down under. Consumer Culture - Death is planned obsolescence with the human body requiring repairs and upgrades until too damaged to salvage
