PART 2 IN THE BOOMA SERIES

Cindy looked over at Booma.

Booma was much too far away from her.

She wanted Booma close to her.

She needed Booma close to her.

It was painful that Booma was so far away out of her range of touch. Out of reach.

She simply had to see Booma's reaction to all of this. She wanted to study Booma's face close up. Not just because she had such a pretty face. But rather, most of all, as Booma's natural discomfort and uncertainty were just exquisite to Cindy who was almost immune to such emotions. At least on the surface.

Cindy cared for Booma a great deal. She needed to look after her.

It was massively important Booma was close by and with her body accessible to her right hand.

Cindy calmly said to Booma.

Booma. Could you come and sit next to me please.

Booma turned this over in her mind. At least if she was sitting next to Cindy then she wouldn't have to be looking at the people in the restaurant who were sitting on the far side of the table behind Cindy who may at any time ask them what the hell they were all doing under the table.

Booma was very happy Cindy had asked her to sit next to her.

She felt a lot more comfortable sitting next to Cindy. If everything did go terribly wrong she could always hide behind Cindy. If she was sitting at the other end of the table she would be all alone over there.

Under these very unusual circumstances she was looking at Cindy as someone who could protect her like some kind of surrogate mother figure. Booma would then be able to abdicate all responsibility and let Cindy answer with her characteristic coolness if people in the restaurant asked what the hell was going on.

It seemed Cindy could handle anything.

Finally Booma found it absolutely thrilling that Cindy had asked her to come and sit next to her.

Cindy really is so clever thought Booma.
